OUTLINE OF TALK

Based on experience on projects and in management of a mid-sized, tailings-focused consulting company, Klohn Crippen Berger, the talk looks at what has changed in the consulting industry over an almost 50-year career. Changes in technology, business approaches, and changes in society are discussed against a background of designing safe but challenging tailings projects and the macroeconomic and societal forces that influence careers. The talk explores how limited opportunities in the 1980/90s are later seen as a stimulus for career growth, while the explosion of mining opportunities post 9/11, 2001 has led to a bold assumption that the engineering and geoscience industry is recession-proof. The retrospective includes a summary of changes, some career advice to younger professionals and a look at what the future might hold for mid-size tailings consulting companies
